ALEXANDRIA ACADEMY.—The fall term of this institution, will commence on Monday, August 31st. The course of study embraces the usual branches of an English Education, the Latin, Greek, and French Languages, and a full course in Mathematics. Youth can be prepared in this School for College, the Counting-Room, or the study of a Profession.—Instruction is given by means of Text-Books, Lectures, and familiar remarks and illustrations on each recitation. To every student is assigned recitations sufficient, in the judgment of the teacher, to occupy the hours allotted to study; and, at the time for reciting, he is thoroughly examined, and such explanations are then given, as will enable him to understand the subject fully, and aid in impressing it clearly upon the mind.

A monthly report of each student, carefully made out from records preserved of all his recitations, is sent to parents and guardians, presenting a faithful account of his industry, scholarship, and general deportment. The students will have the advantage of an attendance upon a regular course of LECTURES on NATURAL PHILOSOPHY and CHEMISTRY delivered during the fall and winter months. These Lectures will be fully illustrated, by a beautiful and complete set of Apparatus. The School is also supplied with Surveying Instruments, Globes, Maps, Charts, and a REFLECTING TELESCOPE, of eight feet focal length, a powerful and effective instrument. In connection with the present School, which has been heretofore open for the admission of day scholars only, a limited number of BOARDING SCHOLARS will be received. Those who attend the School as boarders, will reside in the family of the Principal, and as only a small number will be received, such attention to their morals and comfort will be given, as will, it is believed, supply, in a great measure, the tender solicitude received under the parental roof.

Terms.—The charge for boarding, washing, fuel and lights, with Tuition in English, Latin and Greek, $150 a year, payable quarterly, in advance. The quarters to consist of 12 weeks each. Tuition in French, Drawing and Painting, an extra charge. R. L. BROCKETT, Principal, Alexandria.

THE DOOM.

BY ESCHUYLUS.

'His love was passion's essence—as a tree
On fire by lightning; with ethereal flame
Kindled he was and blasted; for to be
Thus, and enamored, were in him the same.
But this was not the love of living dame,
Nor of the dead who rise upon our dreams,
But of 'ideal beauty,' which became
In him existence, and o'erflowing teems
Along his burning page, distempered though it seems.'

'This breathed itself to life in Julie, this Invested her with all that's wild and sweet;
Through brain and breast
Flash'd the thrilled spirit's loved-devouring heat—
In that absorbing sigh, perchance, more blest
Than vulgar minds may be with all they seek possess.'

Childe Harold.

'It was of strange order that the doom
Of these two creatures should be thus traced out.
Almost like a reality—the one
To end in madness, both in misery.'

THE DREAM.

'Grief hollows hearts even while it ages heads;
And much hot grief in youth, forces up life
With power which too soon ripens, and which drops.'—FESTUS.

'Ein Traum, ein Traum ist unser Leben
Auf Erden hier;
Wie Schatten auf den Wogen, schweben
Und schwinden wir
Und messen unsre trüben Tritte
Nach Raum und Zeit
Und sind (und wissen's nicht) in Mitte
Der Ewigkeit.'—HERDER.

TRANSLATION.

Our life is but a transient gleam—
A cheating dream of bliss;
Like shadows on the waves we gleam,
Then fade as fades the sun's last beam,
Robbed of our happiness.
By fleeting time and space we wound
Our steps so finitely;
While all unmarked, unheard, around
Dark visions flit, soft strains resound,
Of vast eternity.

Kind reader! who porest over these pages succeeding, if they affect thee with leucocholy, or a pleasing sadness, and thereby thou art led to yield one tear of sorrow to the sad fate of these gentle beings, my object shall have been attained. For weary years my mind, like some venerated temple whose shaded niches are filled with statues—the marble effigies of beings long since passed into eternity—has nursed in its treasure-house the forms of the beings whose destiny has been traced out in the following lines; and, now that I have shaken from them the accumulated dust of years, they stand forth—some only fancy pieces—but the greater part old family portraits. The woof of truth has been woven with fiction, so that their hues blend; the dark ground 'being truth, the lighter tissue the hue of fancy. Reader, find out its moral, and the lesson will do thee ultimate good.

It was a strange doom. It was strange that an old family prophecy should have been so literally fulfilled. A prediction told to a female ancestor; who, whilst riding through an old and darkling forest, suddenly saw before her a dwarfish figure, which placed itself directly in her path, raising its long and skinny arm in a manner commanding her to arrest her progress. She needed no second injunction. An indefinable feeling of awe, not unmingled with womanly curiosity, caused her to stop and await the pleasure of this singular creature.

And most remarkable was the appearance which the old woman presented; scarce three feet high, with an attenuated body, proportionate to a child of ten years, her head was enormously large, very large even for a tall and robust male, and it was a wonder how she could support upon her small, scraggy neck, so weighty a burden; her long grey hair hung in thin rosy locks, uncombed, behind her, heightening no little the effect of her strange contour.

Her form was scarcely covered sufficient for decency; a few tatters lay mosaic work upon her filthy limbs. But her eye (and she had only one,) it was that attracted; small and gray, it burned with a strange lustre beneath the shaggy brow, seeming like a fire at night upon a desert heath, flashing in strange variance with her pale, haggard, wrinkled cheeks, and when it was fixed upon one, that one remained spell-bound as though by fascination. No wonder then that the young lady, unattended, should have felt that germ of superstition indigenous to the female breast, begin to burst and grow, filling her mind until she gazed upon the creature before her as a being of a different world. But a voice of childish sweetness broke upon the ear, increasing the already powerful spell upon her mind. It was a wild air which these rude lines were clothed:

"Come gentle lady, follow,
Down to the Demon's hollow,
And gaze in the stream!
Where the shadowy gleam,
Of the future doth beam."

An irresistible influence compelled the lady to alight and pursue the footsteps of the now receding figure. In a deep ravine, where the sunbeams rarely entered, the old woman halted. It was a wild spot; the dark preternatural, caused by the depth of the defile; the high precipitous banks, rising like a natural wall on either hand, overhung by thick clumps of holly and cedar; the jutting fragments of rock, between whose crevices the vines, green and perennial, would creep—seeming like the thoughts of virtue which sometimes find a resting place in a depraved, hard, stony heart; all tended to deepen the awe which had stolen upon the mind of this young and beautiful female. Pale, and with wondering eyes, she stood in the darkest portion of the ravine, as she found that her mysterious guide had suddenly disappeared, and she was alone. And yet she felt no fear, for she was of strange courage and possessed a most indomitable spirit, almost rashly brave; but tinged with a romantic superstition, and to her this spot was most likely to produce those indefinable feelings with which quiet, gloomy nature thrills the mind of a visionary being like herself. Beneath her feet a little streamlet run, whose source she saw not, for it stole from out the gloom a thread of water, winding its silent way far down the dark ravine, till it was lost in the distance. It was a singular sight, to behold in this lifeless gloom, this young and beautiful creature, pale and motionless, standing like a fair statue with her head bent eagerly forward in expectation, and her bosom heaving visibly with anxious emotion. A moaning blast came waiving down the ravine, swelling gradually louder, rustling the dry leaves of the clinging vines, ruffling the face of the water, till it swelled from some unseen source to a wider cut still silent stream; then the wail increased, till the wind appeared to bear upon its wings the howls of many demons,—the darkness became more dense; a pall, as of night, settled like an incubus upon the ravine; and in the midst of this Egyptian gloom the rocky sides hurled back their many echoes of the screaming winds. Still the female moved not, but for the same eager gaze, and quick heaving of the breast, it would have been supposed that she had been suddenly transmuted to stone; the stream had swollen till it had washed her feet; the winds had revelled in her hair, flinging her long jetty tress in wild confusion over her neck; but she heeded not; the fascination of a soul-reaching spell was on her too deep to be easily broken. As if by magic, the noise suddenly ceased, and all was still and hushed as though the very winds were locked in the very embrace of Death. The gloom was lit up by the pale flashes of light that for an instant beamed upon the darkness, and as suddenly vanished, leaving the blinding effect to confound the lovely creature's mind. But she was calm. The same child-like voice chanted to a wild and not unpleasant, yet mournful air, these lines:

Oh! lady behold, at your feet, the stream
Where soon will be shadow'd, the Future's dream;
In the Demon's glass you now shall see,
Your Race's fortune and destiny.
Neither speak, nor disturb the silent spell;
For the birth is in gloom, as thou canst tell;
And in gloom will it end, if thou dost speak,
As by noise, its magical spell doth break.
Hush! hush! and behold at your feet the gleam,
That lightens for you the Demon's stream.
(To be continued.)
